Changes to the Charter

The latest version of the Scottish Social Housing Charter has now been published by the Scottish Government following a review and consultation and has taken effect from April 1.

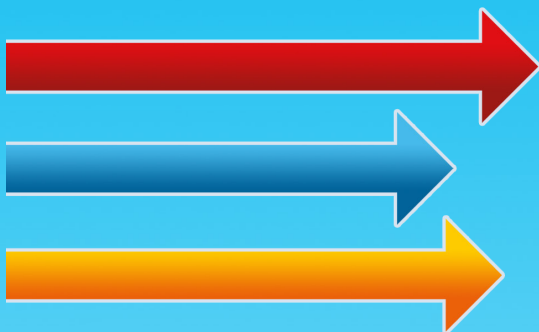

The Charter was introduced as part of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 and was developed to set out the standards and outcomes that all social landlords should be achieving when performing their housing activities.

The Tenants Information Service (TIS) and TPAS Scotland are holding a series of free information events, funded by the Scottish Government, aimed at tenants and landlords to look at the changes that have been made to the Charter.

The events will also showcase a variety of case studies and partnership initiatives that tenants and landlords across the country are taking to scrutinise performance against the Charter, meet the Charter outcomes, and deliver high quality housing services and standards.

Can't attend the information events? Get in touch to find out how TIS and TPAS can bring these events direct to your local area.

The success of the Charter has been recognised both here and internationally as key to improving the standard of services and is recognised good practice in tenant engagement and service delivery.
